PARSHAS VAYIKRA

You Know Who

And he called to Moshe, and Hashem spoke to him... (1:1)

There is an enigmatic Midrash Rabbah on this posuk: "From this verse we see that any talmid chacham that doesn't have da'as (knowledge) is worse than a dead animal carcass. We learn this from Moshe, who was the paradigm of wisdom and prophecy, and took Bnei Yisroel out of Egypt, and performed many miracles in Egypt and Yam Suf, ascended to heaven and brought down the Torah, and constructed the Mishkan. [Even with all this impressive accomplishments] Moshe refrained from entering the holy Mishkan until Hashem called to him" (Vayikra Rabbah 1:15).

What does Moshe's modesty have to do with a talmid chacham who doesn't have da'as? In fact, the listing of Moshe Rabbenu's accomplishments may actually serve to disprove the Midrash's point. After all, perhaps Moshe's vaunted resume required him to have a level of da'as that a "normal" talmid chacham would not routinely require. So, why do we compare an ordinary talmid chacham to Moshe? It seems rather unfair.

In order to understand this difficult Midrash we must first properly define the term da'as. We first find the word da'as used in the Torah by the Eitz Hada'as (Tree of Knowledge), about which Hashem explains to Adam that its fruits are forbidden to him (Bereishis 2:17). Fascinatingly, the Torah says regarding the creation of man and woman, that although they were both naked they were not ashamed (2:25). Yet, once Adam and Chava sinned by eating from the Tree of Knowledge, the Torah says, "Their eyes were opened and they 'knew' they were naked" (3:7).

We see from here that da'as refers to an understanding of oneself, a self-knowledge as it were. As Rashi (ad loc) explains, they became intellectually aware. True da'as is a real understanding of yourself and who you are. Once a person achieves this self-knowledge he can then relate to others in an objective manner. That is, a person no longer defines himself by how others see him; he has a healthy self-definition. Therefore, all his interactions with others will be pure and impartial because he isn't concerned about his image and what others think of him.

This objectivity allows him to connect with others in a very pure form, not clouded by the superficiality of image consciousness and the related complications of emotional insecurity. In other words, his interactions with the world around him aren't about him. This actually is what the snake said to Chava, "Your eyes will open and you will become God like..." (3:5). The snake was explaining that self knowledge gives one an understanding of their potential. Man has the potential to create, and in this way man is God like.

The Midrash is telling us that Moshe Rabbeinu, with the most incredible accomplishments ever achieved, never lost sight of who he was. His modesty was a reflection of his internal self-knowledge that his accomplishments were a fulfillment of his enormous potential, not that it conferred upon him any special privileges. This is why he was chosen as the transmitter of Hashem's Torah – he was able to act as a crystal clear lens to what Hashem wished to convey. Thus, the Jewish people were able to receive the Torah in its purest form, as Moshe never made it about himself.

Often, even accomplished talmidei chachamim become delusional that their achievements somehow make them better than others. In fact, many religious people see themselves as having a higher standing than others, and this sometimes causes them to create their own morality of what is right and wrong. The Midrash is teaching us that we must have the self-knowledge of who we are and not take liberties. As the Midrash points out, even Moshe did not enter the Mishkan until Hashem called to him.

Did You Know...

In this week's parsha we are told that every sacrifice and offering must contain salt (Vayikra 2:13). On the surface, this appears to be a very random concept; why should Hashem care about this seemingly random seasoning? Me'am Lo'ez (Vayikra 7) explains its significance:

1. When food is brought before a king, it never lacks seasoning. So too by the King of kings, the sacrifices must be properly seasoned. In other words, we must internalize who we are serving. →

Wholly Peace

If his offering is a sacrifice of a peace offering, if he offers it from the cattle – whether male or female – unblemished shall he offer it before Hashem (3:1).

Parshas Vayikra introduces the topic of korbonos (sacrifices), which is discussed throughout much of the book of Vayikra. One of the types of sacrifices that we learn about in this week's parsha is the korban shelamim, known as a peace offering. Rashi (ad loc) explains that this sacrifice is known as a peace offering because it brings shalom to the world. Whereas some sacrifices are wholly burnt on the altar, and others are both burnt on the altar and shared with the Kohanim, the peace offerings are shared by all: the altar, the Kohanim, and the owners all receive their share of the sacrifice.

Fascinatingly, both the Targum Onkelos and Targum Yonasan Ben Uziel translate the words korban shelamim as "holy sacrifice." On the surface this is understandable, as sacrifices are referred to as kodshim and this is a prevailing theme throughout book of Vayikra. Yet, one must wonder why specifically the korban shelamim is called a "holy sacrifice." What is the relationship between this type of korban and the concept of holiness?

There is a common misconception that being kadosh means being connected to Hashem and that we judge holiness by how close a relationship someone has with Hashem. However, we know this cannot be the precise definition of the word kedushah because we are enjoined to be "kadosh like Hashem is kadosh" (19:1-3). Obviously Hashem being kadosh isn't judged by His connection to Himself.

Rather the more correct definition of kadosh is to set aside. This is why a woman who gets married is referred to as "mekudshes." She hasn't suddenly become holy; she is set aside for her husband.

Hashem is kadosh because in essence He has separated Himself from creation; He has acted not in His self-interest, but for the sake of man. Hashem in His perfection has no need for anything. All His actions are for our sake. We are enjoined to be kadosh like Hashem is kadosh: to separate from our own self-interest and self-centered desires, and focus on interests outside our own.

The korban shelamim is the only sacrifice in which all the parties have a share. This korban in particular, as Rashi explains, is different than the other sacrifices in that everyone's interest is being served and it brings peace to the world. This is why both the Targumim translate korban shelamim as the kadosh sacrifice.

The Talmud (Zevachim 99b) derives from the verse above that prior to the burial of an immediate family member a person may not bring a korban shelamim (this halachic status is known as Aninus). The Gemara explains that this is because the word shelamim originates from the word shalem (whole).

In other words, these sacrifices are only brought when a person is "whole" (i.e. when one's mind is calm and clear). A person who is an onein is in anguish over his loss, and is therefore ineligible to bring the korban shelamim. The state of Aninus is when one must focus on his own personal loss and begin the process of recovering from that loss. In fact, the word for self is "ani." Thus he is ineligible to bring a korban shelamim – which is the antithesis of self-interest.

2. Idolaters used to be very careful not to lose a drop of blood from their sacrifices. This is because they worshipped Mars, which represents blood. They were therefore careful about not placing any salt on a sacrifice because salt absorbs blood. To draw a clear line of distinction the Torah commanded us to not eat blood and to salt all sacrifices.
3. In the beginning, when Hashem split the two waters to make the sky and the ocean, the ocean complained that it was so far away from Hashem. Hashem, in order to appease the waters on earth, gave them several things, one of which was that every sacrifice would have to be given with salt.

Similarly, we know from the Gemara (Berachos 40a) that a person shouldn't make the blessing on bread unless he has salt (or another dip) in front of him. The Me'em Lo'ez explains:

1. One's table atones for one's sins, just as the Altar did. Therefore, just as with the Altar, salt must always be served on it.

2. Another reason is to gaze at it and remember to talk in Torah at the table. This is alluded to in the Mishnah (Avos 6:4), that if a person wants to be worthy of Torah he should "eat bread with salt."

The last reason to have salt on the table is so that we remember the poor and have mercy on them. Sodom and Gemorah were turned into salt because no one there had pity on the poor.
